

Jennifer Bermon

Biography

Jennifer Bermon grew up in New York City, where she developed her love of photography and had the opportunity to take classes at MOMA and the Met. She interned and studied at the International Center of Photography. She has been working as a professional photographer since age 18, when her first portrait was published. Bermon attended Mills College, where she began the project, and studied photography with Catherine Wagner as part of her self-designed major of photography, art and writing.

She was a photo researcher/editor for The San Francisco Bay Shoreline Guide, a unique guide to the shoreline's cultural, historical, wildlife, and plant life, published by the Coastal Conservancy and UC Press. She has spent the majority of her career working as a producer in network television, specializing in documentaries, national network news and newsmagazine programs. Her work has appeared on NBC, ABC, ITV, MSNBC, CNBC, Discovery Channel, Investigation Discovery, TLC, Weather Channel, E! Entertainment-TV, BayTV/KRON-TV, WNYC-TV, NPR, and KPFA/Pacifica Radio. She lives at the beach in Los Angeles and travels internationally for work.
